All investing involves risk including the possible loss of principal. Gains or losses from positions in hedging instruments, such as options, may be much greater than the instrument's original cost. Shares of an ETF may trade at a premium or discount to the net asset value of its portfolio securities. Small and mid-cap companies may be more volatile than larger, more established companies. Given the complexity of the investments and strategies of the Fund, the Adviser relies heavily on quantitative models and data supplied by third parties, which could expose the Fund to potential risks.
