Alternative investments are speculative and include a high degree of risk. Investors could lose all or a substantial amount of their investment. Alternative investments are suitable only for long-term investors willing to forgo liquidity and put capital at risk for an indefinite period of time. Alternative investments can be highly illiquid, are not required to provide periodic pricing or valuation information to investors, may involve complex tax structures and delays in distributing important tax information, and often charge high fees. Unlike investments into private funds, alternative investment funds often engage in leverage and other speculative practices that may increase volatility and risk of loss. Alternative investments typically have higher fees and expenses than other investment vehicles, and such fees and expenses will lower returns achieved by investors.

This is prepared for sophisticated investors who are capable of understanding the risks associated with the investments described herein and may not be appropriate for you. Diversification does not protect you against a loss in a particular market; however it allows you to spread that risk across various asset classes. Past performance is not a guarantee of future results.

Real estate values are affected by many factors including interest rates and property tax rates, zoning laws, changes in supply and demand, and in the most regional and national economies.

In the ordinary course of its business, Morgan Stanley engages in a broad spectrum of activities including, among others, financial advisory services, investment banking, asset management activities and sponsoring and managing private investment funds. In engaging in these activities, the interest of Morgan Stanley may conflict with the interests of clients.

Funds of funds often have a higher fee structure than single manager funds as a result of the additional layer of fees. Alternative investment funds are often unregulated, are not subject to the same regulatory requirements as mutual funds, and are not required to provide periodic pricing or valuation information to investors. Alternative investment funds may involve complex tax structures and delays in distributing important tax information and are not liquid. Accordingly, you should consult your own tax, legal or other advisors, or both the subset of any transaction and of an original query, to determine such suitability.

A separately managed account may not be suitable for all investors. Separate accounts managed according to the strategy include a number of securities and will not necessarily participate in all securities bought, sold or recommended to clients. Minimum asset levels for the strategy may be waived from time to time. For important information about the investment strategies, please refer to Form ADV Part 2.

No investment should be made without proper consideration of the risks and advice from your tax, accounting, legal or other advisors as you deem appropriate.

All investing involves risks, including a loss of principal. Alternative investments are speculative and involve a high degree of risk.
