

Investing in Asia

Asia's economic revolution has lifted close to a billion people out of poverty and into the middle class. We believe their journey from producers to consumers will likely be an enriching experience for the rest of the world.

Investing in Dividends

The mighty dividend. Very simply, it is the distribution of a portion of corporate profits to its owners. But the dividend isn't at all simple. It has the ability to grow, and with time and reinvestment, can be very mighty indeed.

Investing in Energy

In emerging countries, mass industrialization and a growing middle class are putting extraordinary pressure on energy demand – just as fossil fuels are getting harder and more expensive to extract. The time is ripe for traditional as well as greener energy technologies.

Principal loss is possible.

Investments in foreign securities involve greater volatility, political, economic and currency risks and differences in accounting methods. These risks are greater for emerging markets countries. Non-diversified funds concentrate assets in fewer holdings than diversified funds. Therefore, non-diversified funds are more exposed to individual stock volatility than diversified funds. Investments in debt securities typically decrease in value when interest rates rise, which can be greater for longer-term debt securities. Investments in derivatives involve risks different from, and in certain cases, greater than the risks presented by traditional investments. Investments in smaller companies involve additional risks such as limited liquidity and greater volatility. Funds concentrated in a specific sector or geographic region may be subject to more volatility than a more diversified investment. Investments focused in a single geographic region may be exposed to greater risk than investments diversified among various geographies. Investments focused on the energy sector may be exposed to greater risk than investments diversified among various sectors.
