AFTER A BAD END, A GOOD START

Posted on  April 6, 2019 by  Tom Byrne

The mini-panic of the last quarter of 2018 seems like a distant memory as 2019 witnessed the best start for the S&P 500 in over 20 years. The bad things that were supposed to happen early this year, notably Fed rate hikes and Brexit, have not happened. Though GDP growth slowed to a 2.2% rate, ...

BLAME GAME CONTINUES AMIDST SHARP MARKET DROP

Posted on  January 5, 2019 by  Tom Byrne

The stock market began 2018 with a bit of euphoria in January accompanied by many presidential tweets that seemed to tempt fate. After one mid-winter scare it drifted modestly higher until mid-October, and then abruptly accelerated to the downside culminating with December being the worst month since the meltdown a decade ago. We were reasonably ...

GROWTH STOCKS AND BUYBACKS DRIVE STRONG MARKET

Posted on  October 7, 2018 by  Tom Byrne

The stock market has turned in its strongest quarter of the year so far despite the Fed's recent quarter point increase in short-term interest rates. We had a profitable quarter. Our stock picking skills are intact as we are running ahead of the median stock in the S&P 500 Index by nearly a full percent. ...
