Getting Back On The Right Food (/blog/getting-back-right-food)

By Paul Morrone CFP®, CPA/PFS, MSA

I'm not one to enjoy hanging out in a hospital, much less be a patient in one. Fortunately, I've had the pleasure of largely avoiding hospital visits with the exception of my father's various knee surgeries, Kyle's birth and most recently Jill's foot surgery. While the timing of Jill having surgery on her right foot was inopportune to say the least (as Kyle is now crawling at a very rapid pace, standing up and testing the waters in walking), it was nearly 15 months in the making and definitely much needed.

Ticks... A Constant Battle For Buddy (/blog/ticks-constant-battle-buddy)

By Thomas Morrone CFP®, CPA

Just about anyone that has a pet that ventures outdoors, even if only to do "their business", has dealt with ticks. Well Buddy is not immune to these nasty little critters. People are also common victims of ticks as well. All it takes is a hike in the woods, working in the yard, or searching for an errant golf ball. I have my share of memories of noticing a tick walking on my leg or finding one starting to be embedded and getting all creeped out. By the way, most of my tick encounters have come from searching for errant golf balls. Let's go back to Buddy. Our yard is fenced in and landscaped so he is not out gallivanting in heavily wooded lots chasing rabbits and squirrels. I am sure he would love to be free wheeling and be off leash to wander and sniff at will. That would not be safe for him, so he has grown accustomed to being leashed or in a fenced in area. Even on the leash, he certainly does love going for an adventurous walk around the neighborhood or wherever else we take him.

Father's Day From A New Perspective (/blog/fathers-day-new-perspective)

(/blog/fathers-day-new-perspective)

By Paul Morrone CPF®, CPA/PFS, MSA

I'm now on the other side of the coin for the Father's Day celebration, and selfishly I have to admit I like it. This year was an anomaly in our house as we had an out-of-state wedding the night before and Sunday was primarily a day to get home and get reacclimated before the week started. Admittedly, both Jill and I were exhausted after a late night at the wedding (congrats again to Jim and Meg who are now cruising around Rome on their honeymoon), so we did not have much of a formal plan for the day. That was more than fine with me. On a day like Father's Day, it's not necessarily about what you do, but more about what you don't do.
